INTRODUCTION

Teacners who instruct boys and girls in religios education find it profitable to provide them with books for use outside of class relating to the subject which is being taught. Yet to find such books for enrichment to a course for children's use has often been difficult for the average teacher and required an unwarranted amount of time. The purpose of this study is to provide a crossed subject index of one Hundred child's books in religious education for children from grades one through nine. Through its use the instructor will immediately find the subject which is being taughtad the books and pages dealing with that subject.

CHAPTER I.

HOW INDEX WAS COMPILED - HOW THE BOOKS WERE OBTAINED.

There were two major problems facing the writer when she undertook this assignment. 1. How to know the books available in the field. 2. How to obtain these books for study purposes in compiling the Index.

In order to know the books available within the field, an attempt was made to obtain lists of bibliographies published by those working in Religious Education. Lists of recent publications were obtained from publishing houses. The cumulative Book Index was also consulted. With tentative lists of books compiled from these sources, the study was begun.

The books themselves were often difficult to secure. Those used were found in private libraries and book stores which graciously allowed the writer to make use of their supply for study. Many of the books the compiler would liked to have obtained for study were not available. In this respect the final list is not highly selective for only those books that were accessible could be used. Each of the books chosen for this Index is highly suitable as reference books or enrichment material for children in Religious Education which can beused by children themselves with profit and enjoyment. No outside judgment was used other than the writer's and those working in Religious Education.

This Index includes 100 books in Religious Education of varying types. They deal with subjects such as Biblical History, Church History, Devotional materials for individual use and reference, and a few books on modern biographies. A number of costume books were included because of the background material in studying the Biblical periods. The Index has not included books on World Friendship or books with stories of programs for worship services. Graded Sunday School lesson materials were not used nor any book that was primarily a work book in nature.

Mechanical Procedure in Compiling the Index.

Eachbook of the Index was alphabetically filed on index cards according to the author's name along with information concerning the title of the book, illustrator, publisher, date of publication, illustrations, colored or not colored, number of pages in entire book, the price of the book and the age group for which the book was suitable. Then the book was reviewed page by page. The principal subjects were noted on the index cards together with their respective pages. Later all references from other books on the same subject heading were placed together in the present Index.

No attempt was made to classify the books other than under their subject headings. No theological distinction has been made. The age classification was done by taking the age group indicated by the author as given in the preface or front of book, or age was given by writer purely from her own judgment. No system of rating reading difficulty was used. The age grouping has been done according to the system usually used in the Religious Education departments of the church. Primary covers the first three grades ofpublic school. Junior includes grades four through six, and Junior High grades seven through nine. Many of these books indicated within a certain age group may be suitable for a child in another group near the age of group indicated. Often a book with reading material for junior level may be profitably used by the primary group for its illustrations, or to be read by the teacher. It is understood that a teacher will know the reference before sending the child to it.

Some of the references given have very few pages in a given book, frequently no more than one, but even a short reference has been considered necessary for a complete work, since that book may be available to a teacher and her pupils whereas another with fuller treatment of the subject and more desirable material might not be accessible at the time. Some subjects have little material in any book, so a short reference was in this respect an important reference. Sometimes a short reference has been used because of its excellence in quality.

Where the writer thought the reference was of particular value or interest, she has indicated more specifically the exact nature of the reference. This has been done extensively in dealing with the Parables; for example by naming the particular parable covered under the general heading of Parables.

This is a Selective Index. The writer has chosen only those subjects which she feels will be used by teachers with children from grade one through nine. Some subjects which in this respect were questionable in her mind she included to make the Index more satisfactory.

CHAPTER II.

SUGGESTIONS FOR FURTHER STUDY

I would submit the following suggestions for any who might like to contribute to further working materials of busy teachers:

1. A crossed subject index of available worship services from various sources.

2. A crossed index of stories for worship experiences or moral teaching.

3. An index of World Friendship books for children.

4. A crossed subject index of books and their subjects on the Life and Teachings of Christ.
